

I implore the FCC not to do anything that will dilute the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law protections. This is one of the few laws that has had a direct, immediate, and measurable impact on the average citizen's quality of life. I have had many conversations with friends and colleagues and this is the most popular and beneficial law that has been enacted. Prior to this law, dinner with my family was consistently interrupted by at least five calls a night, which is infuriating and invasive to my privacy. I have not received one unwanted call since subscribing to Indiana's no call list. Any change to Indiana's popular and effective telephone privacy law is a federal invasion of my family's privacy. This is not acceptable. In conclusion, the FCC must not do anything that will lessen the important protections of Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law.
